

DCHI is looking for an enthusiastic intern who wants to help connect, organise and build a platform to enable innovation within the humanitarian sector.

The Dutch Coalition for Humanitarian Innovation (DCHI) brings together governmental actors, knowledge institutes, academia, businesses, and humanitarian organizations in the Netherlands to develop and scale innovative solutions for humanitarian challenges. DCHI's mission is a transformation in the humanitarian sector by realizing impactful innovation, increasing impact and being cost efficient. DCHI is a dynamic movement that leverages the power of resources, expertise and capabilities in the Netherlands to support humanitarian innovation with a global impact. The Coalition is recognized and acknowledged as the driving force in the Netherlands for effective humanitarian innovation.

DCHI does this by offering a platform for different parties to meet, engage and discuss innovation. Our network of more than 300 parties includes all humanitarian agencies based in the Netherlands, many knowledge institutes, a number of network organisations, public organisations, start-ups, designthinkers, financiers and SME's and corporates. DCHI takes an action oriented approach, on the one hand creating an ecosystem of actors committed to the common objective of DCHI by organizing events intended to inspire and inform. On the other hand DCHI supports different partners in setting up projects, in all phases of innovation, both for humanitarian organizations as for private start-ups.

DCHI is financed by non-governmental and governmental organisations. To support our work on a variety of topics, DCHI is looking for intern / volunteers:

We are looking for an intern who wants to:

- Support in organising events, finding interesting speakers and participants, and realising the marketing and communication around the events
- Help creating online and offline content (incl. Keeping our social media on twitter up to date) to keep our members engaged
- Support with innovation projects and workshops that DCHI offers
- Define interesting partners for DCHI and reach out to them
- Be part of a great team and daily business

DCHI offers:

- A pleasant and professional team of colleagues;

- A thorough introduction to the humanitarian sector;
- Lots of opportunity to take initiative and realise your own plans;
- Many chances to meet people from a great number of sectors;
- Opportunity to join the team to many events;
- Personal supervision;
- As an intern, an allowance of €300 for 5 days;
- If applicable: reimbursement of travel expenses;
- Workplace in the heart of The Hague.

What we are looking for:

- A student registered at a Dutch university, preferably end of Bachelor, beginning of Master with a focus on innovation, humanitarian studies, sustainable business, events planning, communications
- Someone with an interest in the humanitarian sector and innovation
- Someone full of ideas and initiative
- Fluent in Dutch and English, both written and orally
- Self-reliant, creative, inventive, fun

More information about the organization can be found on www.dchi.nl

We value different backgrounds and cultures in our organization.

We accept rolling applications, but would you to start February 1, 2019 and for minimum 4 months, You can send your letter of motivation and CV by email to info@dchi.nl please mention what you would be specifically interested in doing.

Your details will be destroyed after the application procedure has been completed.